The outward leg of Tristan Jones is a 15,000-mile journey across the Southern Ocean, one of the most remote and challenging bodies of water on Earth. The journey takes approximately 30 days and is often plagued by strong winds, high seas, and icebergs.

The journey begins in Cape Town, South Africa, and ends on the island of Tristan Jones, a remote British Overseas Territory located in the South Atlantic Ocean. The route takes sailors across the Roaring Forties, Furious Fifties, and Screaming Sixties, three of the most treacherous stretches of ocean in the world.

The outward leg of Tristan Jones is a true test of seamanship and endurance. Sailors must be prepared for anything, including extreme weather conditions, equipment failures, and medical emergencies.

Despite the challenges, the outward leg of Tristan Jones is an incredibly rewarding experience. Sailors who complete the journey are rewarded with stunning views of the Southern Ocean, a sense of accomplishment, and a newfound respect for the power of nature.

Planning the Journey

Planning the outward leg of Tristan Jones is essential for a successful journey. Sailors should take into account the following factors:

- The time of year: The best time to sail the Southern Ocean is during the summer months (November to April), when the weather is more favorable.
- The size of the boat: The boat should be large enough to handle the rough seas and strong winds of the Southern Ocean. It should also be equipped with a reliable engine and navigation equipment.
- The crew: The crew should be experienced sailors who are comfortable working in close quarters. They should also be able to work well together under pressure.
