Genesis: The Divine Commission

The origins of the Warriors and Spies Portals can be traced back to the celestial realms, where the almighty Yahweh, the God of the ancient Israelites, decreed their creation. Yahweh, whose name signifies "I Am," is the supreme deity in the Hebrew Bible, a being of infinite wisdom, power, and compassion.

As Yahweh surveyed his creation, he recognized the need to protect both the divine realm and the fragile human world from the forces of darkness. Thus, he summoned into existence the Warriors and Spies Portals, two distinct groups of celestial beings with unique abilities and missions.

Warriors: Guardians of the Divine Realm

The Warriors Portals were imbued with immense strength, agility, and the ability to wield celestial weapons. Their primary duty was to guard the gates of heaven, preventing malevolent entities from entering the sacred domain. Led by the legendary Archangel Michael, the Warriors Portals were renowned for their unwavering courage and unwavering loyalty to Yahweh. They engaged in fierce battles against demonic hordes, protecting the celestial realm from invasion and ensuring the stability of the cosmos.

Spies: Infiltrators in the Mortal Realm

While the Warriors Portals guarded the heavens, the Spies Portals were charged with a more covert mission—to infiltrate the mortal realm and gather intelligence on the forces of evil. They possessed the ability to disguise themselves as ordinary humans, blending seamlessly into society while carrying out their clandestine tasks.

The Spies Portals were masters of espionage, gathering vital information about the plans and machinations of the enemies of Yahweh. They reported their findings back to the divine realm, providing invaluable insights that allowed the Warriors Portals to mount effective countermeasures.
